Abstract

This study explores the bisexual identity formations in Taiwan. Due to the existed research rarely recognize the bisexual subjects, the authors attempt to present bisexual subjects' experience in terms of this qualitative research. In terms of doing fieldwork in "Bi the Way", a newly organized social group, the researchers collect data to analyze the formation of bisexual identity. Border-crossing is not easy. The bisexuals of "Bi the Way" have built their own community and are trying to develop more discourses to enhance their sexual identities. The authors hope that these empirical findings prove useful in illuminating that bisexual people's resistance is on the margin and the bisexual community. is built to be empowering.
